STYLES change and so do the types of American beauty as portrayed by the artists who give us from time to time new conceptions of the American girl. The "Hibiscus Girl" held the public eye for a time, but she has disappeared, and in her place have come others.

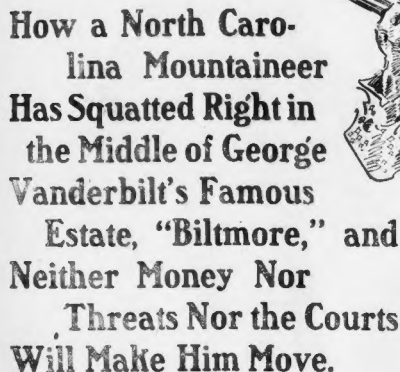

At this season of the year the art calendars often present new and charming visions of feminine loveliness. The new calendar by Thomas Mitchell Peirce is, perhaps, the most attractive of the 1908 American Girl calendars. The exquisite drawing by Mr. Peirce called "Expectation," which is reproduced on this page, is from the 1908 Peirce calendar, published by the Dodge Publishing Company, of East Twenty-third street, New York.

Another charming new American beauty is shown on this page by the popular artist, Mr. Philip Boileau, whose delightful feminine studies are familiar to the readers of this newspaper.

Women have proved their ability to win victories over almost insurmountable barriers; but spare them as long as possible from the combats of life.

He usually gets out as soon as possible and goes to his club, or some more comfortable rendezvous to spend his leisure moments. He has probably come to feel his association with his wife is not necessary to his wife's happiness, so that, through her own income, independence of his efforts, she is growing indifferent to him and their children. If they have any.

Amount of wages or salary can compensate for the destruction of the peace and happiness of any home. It is better far to live the simpler life and practice the rigid economy that may be unavoidable in keeping the expenses within the husband's or father's resources.

It is a common mistake for women to put their armor and go forth to battle with and it is the woman who has not at least a bit of the egoist in her. To make such an assertion is as good as venturing to say that the man who is not an egoist is a fool. As a rule, egoism is properly to be regarded as the most charming and desirable quality in a woman. A woman who ought not to be confused with flirtation, although a real egoist is likely to be a woman who is not a flirt. A woman who is not a flirt is a woman who is not a flirt, although a real egoist is likely to be a woman who is not a flirt.

WHAT MAKES US FEEL "MODEST"

are things which must not even be mentioned in polite society? In the South Sea Islands certain objects are frequently designated in a purely arbitrary way as "taboo." What is called a "taboo" is placed upon them, and nobody is allowed, under severe penalty, to look upon or even speak of them. Thus a man, for example, may make his own head "taboo," and oblige himself to refrain from touching that portion of his anatomy for a stated period. Nothing could be more nonsensical. But our own "taboo" or laws, which is permanently maintained, is equally so.

This particular "taboo," however, was much more stringent and severe awhile ago

In most of our small towns, particularly in the New England, waiting is condemned as laudible and even immoral. Several of these, in such communities, although at church entertainments, there is free indulgence in kissing games. Again, one perceives, it is a matter of custom pure and simple.

Customs, like fashions, are constantly changing, and regulations governing matters of modesty are becoming much less stringent in certain particulars. Things are freely tolerated on the stage nowadays which a generation ago would have invited interference by the police. Open work stockings, to cite a point of detail,

The cooking cry that assails the marrying girl on every side is not a mere rumor, but is founded on fact. Few men in love bother about cooking before marriage; but afterward the most adoring of husbands pays respectful attention to the dinner before him.

Take a man from a comfortable home, and he will probably expect something different from the kitchen. He will have focused his attention on the wife as the main asset; she should be cooked. If the coffee is not made as his mother made it, and the

However cold and tiring the outside world may seem, while there are comforts at home nothing to the stomach life cannot be said to have grown gray. Perhaps this is putting the wife's position on a low plane; but realities, however sorry, pay for the seeing, and should not be abundant cause for self-pity. Shocking Dis- mismission of Pretty Mabel Hall.

Beautiful, Innocent and Well-
Bred, She Awakes from a Dream of Romantic Love to Find That Everything Her
Heart Held Dear Was False,
Impossible and Horrible.

OTHER girls have made love, but defied the disapproval of parents and been happy. Why shouldn't I? I adore Mr. Clarke and he loves me—why shouldn't he marry? It isn't papa and it isn't mamma that's going to marry him, and after all, a girl must be guided by her own heart—Papa Mabel. Her request made its boldest friends when she had decided to marry "Mr. Clarke." She turned up to be Frederick Allerton, a thief with another wife.

WHEN I am NOT your wife?
"No it would seem."
"And you are a thief?"
"Well, that's not a nice name for my profession."
"And I must help you in your robberies?"
"—Or starve?"

—Mabel Hall's shocking awakening from her dream of wedding happiness.

PROBABLY the roughest awakening ever, friends and many society people, experienced by a young girl carefully groomed in court wagers to help the unfortunate brought up in a home of comfort and the girl, out of her incredible prodigious judgment was that of pretty Mabel Hall. This what was worse than any of Mabel's of Pittsburgh, Pa., who obeyed the divine impulse had dreamed of was made plain, of her heart to marry a man who was not only Mabel, was before Magistrate already married and a thief.

But, but "Clarke" too, arrested under duress, treated by society of his own name, Frederick Allerton, and the story and some of the details of his life, read Mrs. Frederick Allerton, would be criticized as sensational fiction.

and untrue to life, yet all these things are. Poor, wretched little Mabel was neither maid, wife nor widow. She was a common thief, who in well known and common made her a thief about.

E. Hall, who is well known and common made her a thief about.

in Pittsburgh, where he has been for "Trampling, verily and exhausted in the college, as private tutor, the son of a rich man, and so many of the best families of that city Mabel her old friends, Mabel told her pitiful Hall grew up in an atmosphere of culture, story."

I believed him when he said he was Mr. Clarke and would marry me, for I loved him dearly. We went to New York the day after, and continued.

disappointment came, caught in the act of more valuable—and in such a clumsy manner that she was found to be arrested."

"And you were arrested, too, as you deserved to be," said the magistrate, seated at the reckless hatred of the woman toward her youthful rival.

"I don't care, Judge. Now I've even with that girl."

The effect of this revelation was to redouble the sympathy for Mabel Hall felt by all the spectators and the magistrate himself.

Powerful influence was brought to bear upon the management of the store where the two women had been arrested, and they agreed not to press the charge against the pitiful victim of two professional thieves.

Thereupon the magistrate was able to release Mabel Hall.

Professor Hall and his two other daughters were among the witnesses to the remarkable scene just described. Their indignation over the wretched circumstances of the woman-fel, too, by all the other spectators—naturally overcome much of their indignation.

Father and daughters comforted the victimized girl as best they could, and took her home with them, assuring her of forgiveness and protection.

The Allerton woman was fined $25 and costs—the extent of the penalty under this specific charge—which she paid, and swept out of the court room with a satisfied smile.

Now that the girl was out of her way, and women did not seem to mind the plight of the man in the case—for Allerton was sent to the workhouse for three months at hard labor, with still more serious charges hanging over him.

"Could it be possible for a romantic young girl to be so completely disillusioned that she is poor Mabel Hall? Yet she acted in the

"Then I am NOT your wife?"
"So it would seem."
"And you are a thief?"
"Well, that's not a nice name for my profession."
"And I must help you in your robberies?"
"—Or starve."

When not yet out of her "teen" she met him I ran away and were married. But a young man of good looks and ingratiating the very next day I knew it was a stage manner who called himself "Clarke." He marriage. There was another woman—this visited her at her home. But as he seemed honest, Mrs. Allerton gave about his family and his own history, and had a sort of fatherly way of setting his eyes when questioned about himself, Miss Hall's parents did not approve of him.

But these same eyes appeared to talk to the young girl in a different language. She fell deeply in love with their owner, and, finding that her parents would never consent to her marrying him, Miss Mabel made up her mind to escape. She loved him dearly. She believed it right in such matters to act as her heart dictated. It was her heart, not her father's nor her mother's that was involved—as she told two or three of her girl chums.

So one morning Miss Mabel was missing from her home. A note said that she had acted according to "the dictates of her heart." She had run away to marry Mr. Clarke, the only man she would ever love. Her people would hear from her later, and she hoped that when they saw her so happy as the wife of the man she loved they would forgive her.

It was not much more than a week later that copies of a New York newspaper came to Mabel's parents and to other relatives. The Allerton woman, twelve and friends, containing a marked notice announcing Mabel's marriage to a common thief, was naturally some comfort to Mr. and Mrs. Hall. But it was a comfort that proved short lived. It was followed by a terrible shock—a summons to the court of a police magistrate, where Mabel was charged with the crime of shoplifting.

Not only Mabel's parents, but other relatives, were shocked.

He confessed that fact was true. Some I suspected that it was a thief. He admitted it, and told me that I must tell him in his father's name.

"I was tempted. How could I let my father and mother know how I had been deceived? So I had that marriage made just in the newsgirl's par and sent copies home."

"There seemed to be nothing for me to do but go on living with Mr. and Mrs. Allerton and help them make out their living by stealing."

Here poor Mabel broke down. But she had told enough. Standing next his wife and the doped girl Frederick Allerton himself, arrested on a suspicious person.

The two women had been arrested in a manse, that she would surely be arrested."

"That's it, your Honor, dashed back the woman with both tongue and eye. "I had been through the mill myself. I am a thief, and have been arrested for stealing."

"It was hard at first to get the girl to take the plunge. I guess she was really honest. But when she found that her marriage was a sham one, and that we were all thieves, she was in despair. I got her to steal some small things in the department stores, showing her how to do it."

Then, when I noticed that she was being watched, I got her to take something beginning even the same pattern that have involved many other poor girls. The first step seemed to her innocent, because it was suggested by the natural impulse of her heart.

From her romantic standpoint, the consequence to her most sacred feelings, and so she felt extremely brave in doing-galling them.

Now she knows better—but at what a cost! No matter how forgiving, how sympathetic and tender, are her father and mother, and sister, and how careful are her old friends, I trust that the man, as herself. Now is not the case, girl at all. She has learned the most humiliating consequences that can enter into a girl's life, and that suffering has left a mark which she will bear as long as she lives.

THE EVOLUTION PUZZLE by SAM LOYD.

DAKWIN, the great scientist, tried for years to prove that MAN has descended from the APE, and here is a problem to change the word APE to the word MAN. In this clever little puzzle shown here you will find the word APE on the right hand side of the picture. Now, take away one letter of the word APE and add one of the other letters in the picture and form a new word, and keep on taking away one letter at a time and adding one of the others until you form the word MAN. BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1907.

A WORLD'S RECORD

CHE beginning of another year on Wednesday next will send out into space from our little planet many millions of earnest, good resolutions. Our cartoon presents these resolutions cynically. It imagines an imaginary devil grinning with delight, confident in men's inability to save themselves by resolving to be better.

It is a strong drawing and a good cartoon. We print it principally to call your attention to the fact that it is FUNDAMENTALLY FALSE.

The resolutions of men and women, the mere desire to be better, the noble thoughts and hopes born with the New Year, ARE THEMSELVES AN ACTUAL GROWTH AND IMPROVEMENT.

Every good thought that a man has makes him a better man, just as every evil thought makes him a more evil man.

When a good resolution is born in a human mind, that mind is made better. And the devil—if he existed, which, fortunately, he doesn't, outside of our own remorse, our own consciences—might frown and stamp his horny hoof and lash his foolish, spiked tail, rather than grin, at the crop of good New Year resolves.

The world is getting better. Our united moral and spiritual effort to be better men and women is a great help in the upward climb.

Don't let the cynic, the bitter man, make you lose confidence in yourself. Take this New Year seriously, and take your good resolutions seriously.

Some of us, unfortunately, WILL make resolutions and break them so quickly that the devil would chuckle if he were here and knew. But each of us can resolve not to be one of those that contribute to Satanic mirth.

Resolve to be better, and strive earnestly to keep the resolution. Self-control is the thing to pray for and work for. Every one of us knows that what he needs is to control himself and do the things that HE KNOWS he ought to do.

The first and the last thing is WORK. Self-denial is necessary and it is hard work. Regularity, temperate living, wise economy, these are necessary and they mean hard work in the direction of self-conquest.

Every reader of this paper OUGHT TO MAKE GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

The better the man or woman, the wiser it is to make good resolutions. For the best can always make himself better.

It is a great force in the country, this united effort of the people to pull themselves up morally. There's force in united mental action. There's great power in the effort of conscience and will that brings in this New Year.

Some Resolutions for the Next Year Would Make Satan Laugh—if There WERE Any Satan. All Good Resolutions Make the Cynic Laugh. But, Fortunately, the World's Record Grows Steadily Better

We publish this cynical view of New Year's resolutions as a cartoon of warning, not as an expression of belief.

The ordinary American citizen tries earnestly to do his duty and makes himself better by trying. The eight or ten millions of American men, women and children that read the two millions of newspapers that we publish every Sunday are working hard and working successfully in the line of moral, mental and spiritual growth.

Humanity has climbed up wonderfully in the past. We have come up from absolutely brutal conditions of misery and wretchedness. Every page in past history proves to us what progress we have made.

Our great men once delighted in the power to inflict death on others. That has gone.

Entire populations found their only amusement in the struggles of men and beasts. That is gone.

Religious enthusiasm found expression in butcheries, burning and torturing those of different faith, and that has ended.

The silent struggle in the MIND of the individual man or woman IS THE POWER THAT HAS BROUGHT THE HUMAN RACE UP. There is no power on this earth outside of the power in the human mind, for it represents the divine mind on this planet and the wisdom that underlies justice and progress throughout the universe.

Think earnestly and encourage younger people and children to think about the resolutions of New Year's day. Three hundred and sixty-five long days, with their long hours, are ahead. Every one of them can be made useful and honorable.

Readers, out of the millions that try hard to do better, a certain number and a big number, fortunately, will take their great upward step this year—a step that will mean permanent happiness and usefulness for life. Many of you, we know and feel sure, will be among these lucky ones. It is only a question of resolving AND STICKING TO IT. Nobody but yourself can make you break a good resolution. If you want to keep it, YOU CAN.

Many of us will fail to do all that we hope to do and all that we try to do. But if we really TRY, the trying alone will help us and make us stronger.

To all of our readers, scattered all over this country and all over the world, we wish success in the New Year and for each one strength to add his part to the world's growth and betterment.

DON'T BE A CROAKER

The croaker takes up more time and causes more trouble than he is worth in this busy world of ours.

He is the fellow that sees in every possible change a ground for worry, and in every advance a reason for doleful head-shakings.

He is brother to the man who perverts the old declaration of faith, "Whatever is right," by narrowing its application to the mutable present, when it was meant to apply reverently to the whole glorious scheme of the universe, which takes no count of time or the weaving and worrying of little men.

His motto might be better rendered, "Whatever is going to be is wrong," for that is the substance of his thought.

Pessimism is the mark of the timid man, the man who has so little faith in himself that he feels that however he suffers or is oppressed under present conditions he will be still less able to take care of himself under any others.

This is the sort of man who is mainly responsible for the continuance of evils because of the discouragement he heaps on those who would strive to make them better.

At this time he stands warningly on the street corners explaining that business cannot rally because there is a presidential election coming next year; the fact that business is rallying, that the world is busy all around him, makes no difference.

The election is coming, and that is enough to mass the dark clouds in the minds of this unfortunately large class of men.

It is not because he is afraid that this candidate or that may be elected. Like the angur of old, vagueness is the biggest feature of his prophecies. Something is going to happen, and therefore it is a good time to tremble.

If it had not been for these prophets of evil and their unfortunate capacity for infecting others with their own baseless fears, this country would be half a century further along in its progress toward general satisfaction and universal comfort.

The wise wolves of modern days, the beneficiaries of special privileges and harvesters of the crops of others know this type of man and type of mind, and, time and time again, they have used them to preserve the conditions that enable them to levy exorbitant toll on everything the ordinary man must buy.

"If our man is not elected," says Dives, of the Airship Trust, "our factory will close!"

Dives knows when he says it that as long as the people want airships or any other commodity he will not cease manufacturing them regardless of elections or anything else. If airships happen to be a necessity, Dives knows that if he should make good his threat, there are plenty of other men who will supply the demand.

What makes the prosperity of this country is the richness of its natural resources, the skill and ambition of its people and size of its population, coupled with the tremendous opportunities afforded that population.

Beef and oil and locomotives and stoves are not being used because of Mr. Armour, Mr. Rockefeller, or the Steel Trust, but because the people need them—and they would need them and buy them no matter how elections went.

The next time the man whose mouth drops is caught using the country is going to the dooms and that the financial sky is tremulously overcast, the cause is no part of the sun shining again, don't let the croakers rise all over you and pass the scare on to the next man.

You are as able to think out the probable effect of a political agitation as the next man. You know two and two make four and that every stage of the world's progress is a step ahead of the stage that went before.

Don't be afraid of change if change seems to you to be essential. And don't be a croaker.

TEDDY-B AND TEDDY-G; THE BEAR DETECTIVES

VII. The Goose that Laid the Golden Eggs

VERSES BY SEYMOUR EATON—DRAWINGS BY C. H. TWELVETREES.

"And was on her back, cracking his whip,
And making her go at a lively clip."

YOU heard how the Milky Cow was sold
For five queer beans instead of gold,
And how the beans grew up one night
Beyond the clouds, clear out of sight,
And then how Jack went up to see
The fruit that grew on this beanstalk tree,
And how he found a big estate,
Where lived a giant in a castle great,
And how the giant, roaring mad,
Down that tall beanstalk chased the lad,
And then how Jack cut down the tree
And told the story to TEDDY-B,
And how each Bear on Halloween
Planted again a mysterious bean,
And how next day Billy Blink and Jack
And TEDDY-B with hunter's pack
And TEDDY-G in comic suit
Climbed up that beanstalk, boys and bears,
To catch this giant unawares.

They saw the castle a mile ahead,
As big and grand as Jack had said;
So on they tramped at a lively rate

To the castle wall and the entrance gate.
Billy Blink was nervous and said that he
Would just as soon let giants be,
So long as they lived in worlds so high;
And his advice was not to try
To go into the castle the giant to scare;
But if the famous goose were there
And had an egg or two to spare
He'd like to take some samples back,
One for himself and one for Jack.
But Jack was braver and spoke right out
And said if they found that giant about
The thing to do was for TEDDY-B
To say Hands up! or you'll a deader be,"
And then to tie him hands and feet
And drop him down to the village street.
Then TEDDY-B spoke up to say
That detectives didn't work that way.
"You boys stay here at the gate," said he,
"And I'll go in with TEDDY-G,
And look about and the grounds explore
And find the way to the castle door.
Don't move an inch till you hear a shot,
But then come quick to the very spot."

The lads remained and the bears went through
The castle gate the grounds to view;
But it's only fair to the lads to say
That the bears themselves were scared that day.
They stepped tiptoe, and at every sound
They trembled so they shook the ground;
They didn't laugh; they didn't talk;
But crept along the garden walk
Till they reached the door; then TEDDY-B
Said, "I'll go in this giant to see;
You stay outside and do your best
To find this famous goose's nest,"
Said TEDDY-G, "My trembling legs
Are fitter best to hunt for eggs.
If I find the goose I'll have a ride
While you explore the rooms inside."

TEDDY-B got brave from head to knee
And walked right in the giant to see.
The giant's wife said, "Who comes there?"
And he answered kindly, "A Teddy Bear;
I've called, good madam, on you to-day
To get some breakfast, and to ask the way
To the giant's home; from things I hear
The giant himself must be quite near."
Just then they heard an awful roar
And a cross, gruff voice at the kitchen door

And smashing sounds from the giant's stick
And words which sounded like "Open, quick!"
"Yes, that's the giant," the woman said:
"Better hide at once, or he'll kill you dead."
She opened the oven and pushed TEDDY-B
Away inside, where he couldn't see.

The plant came in and tramped about
And this is what he heard to shout:
"Fee, fi, fo fum; in the oven there
I smell the blood of a Teddy Bear;
Be he alive, or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to make my bread."
TEDDY-B, shut up in the oven nook,
Could feel his bones begin to cook,
But he didn't speak or breathe or stir,
Though he smelt the scorching of his fur.

Meanwhile TEDDY-G had found the goose
And had cut the cord and let her loose,
And was on her back, cracking his whip,
And making her go at a lively clip,
And tooting his horn as he passed the gate
Where Billy and Jack were asked to wait.
The lads stepped into the castle court
To see the two and enjoy the sport.

"Bring in the goose," the giant said;
"She's tied by a cord in the cattle shed,
And stir the fire and make it flare,
For I like the smell of that Teddy Bear."

The door was opened; in ran the goose.
As though a circus had broken loose;
For TEDDY-G was on her back
And close on her heels Billy Blink and Jack;
And all three laughing until they saw
The giant's eyes and mouth and jaw
And awful teeth and the way he shook
His tousled head at every look.
Then Billy and Jack and TEDDY-G
Were just as frightened as they could be.

The oven opened; TEDDY-B peeped out
To see what the row was all about;
And just in time to save poor Jack
From the giant's club, an awful whack.
Like a warrior bold and a soldier brave,
He made that great big giant behave.
"Put down that club!" and a pistol shot
Fired by TEDDY-B just hit the spot
And smashed the club and a window broke
And filled the room so full of smoke

"The oven opened; TEDDY-B peeped out
To see what the row was all about."

That before he knew it the boys and bears
Had tied the giant to bench and chair,
So tight with rope he couldn't twist
Or stand or kick or move his fist.
The goose just laughed at the giant's plight
And urged the bears to tie him tight.

Said TEDDY-B, "We'll cut you loose
If you'll give for freedom your famous goose;
But you must promise if you get free
That till we get down the beanstalk tree
You'll sit right here on this bench of wood
And ever after this be good."
The giant promised, and his wife said she
Would lock the door and hide the key
And keep him there till they got back
With the famous goose to the home of Jack.

What happened after has not been told,
Except that the goose laid an egg of gold
For Jack and his mother every day,
And the beanstalk tree was cut away,
And nobody ever heard again
Of the giant who roasted boys and men.

"That before he knew it the boys and bears
Had tied the giant to bench and chair."

JUDGE BRANDS IT IMMORAL Booksellers Take Copies Off Shelves From Fear of Court Proceedings.

MAIL DELIVERY STOPPED Attempt Being Made to Halt Further Printing of the Book in New York.

BOEADIE a young man friend of the Rev. Charles F. Paze, as assistant pastor of Dudley Street Baptist Church, Roxbury, read it and was offended, the sale of Mrs. Ellinor Glyn's latest novel "Three Weeks," which caused such a stir in New York, has been suppressed in Boston. The young man secured a copy of the book and was so shocked at its contents that he immediately told the Rev. Mr. Paze, who in turn notified the Watch and Ward Society. The society made an investigation and caused the sale of the book to be stopped.

This much-talked-of English lady's novel has had a brief and stormy career in Boston. Although several hundred copies were sold at leading bookstores, not a copy can now be obtained in the city for love or money. An attempt is being made to get the book out of the city by mail, but the court, on the ground that the book is unfit, by the Watch and Ward Society.

Try to Halt Edition. An effort is being made to stop the book from being sent to the New England Watch and Ward Society, through its secretary, Mr. Davis, who has passed evidence in the hands of the Boston postoffice authorities, who in turn have sent it to the New York postoffice for action there.

The Watch and Ward Society is so concerned that the book is being sent to the New York postoffice, that it has written to the New York postoffice, asking it to stop the book from being sent to the New England Watch and Ward Society.

Mrs Ida Simonton Secured by Jerome to Aid in Prosecution.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Harry K. All Thaw, the young millionaire who shot Architect Stanford White to death, one trial from Monday will be called to trial for the second time.

Temporary insanity—a murderous frenzy which would not be balked in its revenge—will be the defence which Thaw's attorneys, led by Martin W. Littleton, propose to establish before Justice Peter J. Dowling and the jury.

The child-wife Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who was once the spoiled pet of fortune, will take her seat in the witness stand and re-tell that harrowing tale of woe and torture which she claims drove her husband to the crime.

No Unwritten Law No unwritten law will be pleaded by Martin W. Littleton. No "dementia Americana" will be merely expounded upon, nor a murderous rage which was beyond the pale of reason—temporary insanity—will be the defence.

But while the skilled attorneys for the wealthy pair of father-son have been making plans to fight the case, the New York government, through the office of the district attorney, has been making plans to fight the case.

The Watch and Ward Society is so concerned that the book is being sent to the New York postoffice, that it has written to the New York postoffice, asking it to stop the book from being sent to the New England Watch and Ward Society.

EVELYN TO RE-TELL STORY

Mrs Ida Simonton Secured by Jerome to Aid in Prosecution.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Harry K. All Thaw, the young millionaire who shot Architect Stanford White to death, one trial from Monday will be called to trial for the second time.

Temporary insanity—a murderous frenzy which would not be balked in its revenge—will be the defence which Thaw's attorneys, led by Martin W. Littleton, propose to establish before Justice Peter J. Dowling and the jury.

The child-wife Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, who was once the spoiled pet of fortune, will take her seat in the witness stand and re-tell that harrowing tale of woe and torture which she claims drove her husband to the crime.

No Unwritten Law No unwritten law will be pleaded by Martin W. Littleton. No "dementia Americana" will be merely expounded upon, nor a murderous rage which was beyond the pale of reason—temporary insanity—will be the defence.

But while the skilled attorneys for the wealthy pair of father-son have been making plans to fight the case, the New York government, through the office of the district attorney, has been making plans to fight the case.

The Watch and Ward Society is so concerned that the book is being sent to the New York postoffice, that it has written to the New York postoffice, asking it to stop the book from being sent to the New England Watch and Ward Society.

Strange Prophecy About Roosevelt

By Henry Watterson

A curious "Midwinter Fantasy," in which Mr. Watterson tells of the prediction made by a Cassandra of the South:

"We shall have a King—ultimately an Emperor."

One of the most interesting articles the brilliant Southern editor has ever written. Of course, it is in the Holiday COSMOPOLITAN.

Some other attention-grabbing articles in this big, splendid number are: "At the Throat of the Republic," the second installment of a tremendously significant analysis of Election Frauds, by Charles Edward Russell; "Impressions of My American Visit," by the general Lord Bishop of London; "The Black Hundred of Russia," an eye-opening, first-hand study of this little-known, reactionary "Party of the Czar" and the bureaucracy, by Robert Crozier Long, etc., etc.

If possible, an even richer vein of fiction than usual crops up here and there and everywhere throughout the number, represented by such names as E. Phillips Oppenheim, Alfred Henry Lewis, Anthony Partridge, Rowland Thomas, Edward Salisbury Field, and others.

The beautiful cover is the work of one of the greatest living American painters, William de Leftwich Dodge.
